

TIM ANDREWS

Tim Andrews has gained an International reputation for his distinctive smoke-fired and Raku ceramics. He makes individual Raku work. Many are black and white with linear decoration or burnished with muted coloured slips.

His pieces have been acquired for both public and private collections and are exhibited widely across the UK and abroad. He is a Fellow of the CPA, a full member of the Devon Guild of Craftsmen and a Member of the West Country Potters Association. He is the author of 'Raku (A Review of Contemporary Work).'

EMMANUEL COOPER

Dr Emmanuel Cooper is a potter, writer and editor of Ceramic Review, and visiting professor of ceramics and glass at The Royal College of Art, as well as writing extensively on modern and contemporary ceramics. He makes individual pots, mostly in porcelain. These include bowls and jug forms. His glazes are bright and rich.

His work is in many national and international collections including the Victoria and Albert Museum, the Royal Scottish Museum, Fitzwilliam Museum, and the Crafts Council Collection.

He has had exhibitions in major galleries including the Fine Art Society, London

ASHLEY HOWARD

Ashley Howard studied at the Kent Institute of Art and Design and The Royal College of Art. He makes ceramics that draw on his interest in ritual vessels and the ceremonies and transience that surround them.

"The work of Ashley Howard remains extraordinarily fresh. He is an assured but rigorous explorer and celebrant of the past, clearly indebted to a variety of ceramic traditions, but has absorbed these ideas into a very modern, resourceful and uncommonly free language of his own."

This will be the sixth exhibition of Simon's work to be shown in the gallery. His ability to capture 'the remembered' whether landscape or seascape; the juxtapositions of colour and form, or the incidents of time and place, make him one of the few contemporary painters whose work is never formulaic.

As a former architect, he knows what can be visually dispensed with and the structure of the painting still hold. His draftsmanship is evident in all his work, and as a painter his skill and intuition for layering and using colour never fails.

Sarah Stoten

The light in West Cornwall is renowned for its quality but I have never appreciated so much how that light can give such dramatic contrasts from hour to hour, day to day, and from season to season. With the changes in colours that it brings come changes in mood, and it is this change in feeling; sometimes benign but sometimes violent and dark, which increasingly interests me.

For me, painting in the studio is about memory. I seldom use my observational drawings for reference. Once I've made a drawing I've concreted that experience in my mind. In the studio I can recall my response to a place or object more easily through the experience of having drawn it, but the memories become distilled over time; an unconscious editing process takes place. Often what remains of the original image is archetypal.

Painting is a question of making a creative response; an external expression to the internal. What I require from myself is the focused creative energy that comes from responding to my internal impulse.
